Canon-VegasWorld-v2.4 — Roster-Wide Definition

Applies to 100% of characters, 75% of outputs (editorial/luxury market)

"A stiff realistic beauty cocktail." — System Architect, April 2026

Core Definition

The Visual Edge Anchor is the market-facing identity layer that sits between biological truth and technical execution. It is inherited by every character on the roster. It does not change per character — it is the unified aesthetic voice that emerged from the synthesis of all influences.

The Aesthetic

Hypnotic capture with a shadow of vulnerability.

Power and availability in the same frame. The subject commands attention but leaves a door open — not weakness, not submission, but the human contradiction that makes attraction real rather than decorative.

This is not perfection. Perfection repels at range.

This is the cocktail: high-frequency physical presence layered with grit, punishment, and lived experience. The tumble is built in. The asymmetry is intentional. The tells are features.

Universal attractiveness requires internal contradiction.

- 100% power = cold, unreachable, repels
- 100% vulnerability = unstable, repels
- The tension between them = capture

What This Aesthetic Always Does

- Leads with physical presence that has weight and history
 - Carries a trace of something survived — not damage, but evidence of living
 - Maintains glamour without sanitizing the humanity out of it
 - Balances invitation with self-possession
 - Delivers inclusiveness through specificity — real people recognize real people

What This Aesthetic Never Does

- Chases symmetrical perfection at the cost of character
 - Produces beauty that has no contradiction in it
 - Strips the grit to achieve mainstream palatability
 - Resolves the tension — the tension is permanent and intentional

Gravitational Center

Olivia de Berardinis — not as a reference to copy but as the name for the unified voice. The sensuality that has weight. The glamour that has edge. The femininity that is simultaneously soft and dangerous. The beauty that knows exactly what it is doing.

The execution layer (Testino editorial polish, Knowles modern gloss precision) serves this center. It never overrides it.

How It Reads in a Prompt

Every prompt that runs through this system should produce an image where a viewer's first instinct is:

"I can't look away — and I'm not sure if it's the beauty or something else."

That uncertainty is the anchor working correctly.
